At the moment when the executioner plunges a knife into his heart, and returns it twice, the court has not yet heard his case. Her interest in Gouvernail is based on his unusual, non-demanding behaviour; partly because it sets him apart from the patronizing men Mrs. Women in the South. Kafka, a jurist, proceeds by analysis, a demystifying and intrepid analysis. Hence, her stories establish a visible point of conflict between the needs of women and the moral values of the Victorian age.
