One-on-one meetings with a supervisor, mentor or faculty member are the most common avenue for students to engage in structured reflection and integration. How we use them is not our business alone. We are called to learn contentment and practice generosity beyond what we feel we can afford. Basic concepts of culture, subculture, collective behavior, social institutions. Thinking Biblically about Stewardship. Charles Foster, et al. How could seminaries expect field education to be effective in teaching practical wisdom when it is positioned as a sideline activity for theological education, rather than a dynamically integrated component of the basic programmatic and curricular work? I discovered that the Bible speaks about money and possessions more than any other book. It offers the following tips: .
