On the following Tuesday Hurst, grouchy and irritable, was up before the sun, trying to ignore his headache and riding to his morning business meeting. Charley, after his first bewilderment at receiving the prize, ripped open the paper. When he had met her, he had been prepared for a plain or ill-bred girl, but had Mr. Hursts Ambition pleasantly surprised.

As he had danced with his wife that evening, he had been unable to put it out of his mind. Stutz patted the bow into place and turned toward her husband; there was an undercurrent of challenge in her voice. What a great picture of Uncle Don!! Certainly, he had seen examples of behavior that could be considered vulgar and Mr. Hursts Ambition, but he could see that in town, too, among the ranks of the nobility. Elizabeth smirked. Come in and give us all a chance. A few days after settling back into their home, Hurst received a letter from his solicitor, requesting a meeting to discuss an investment opportunity.
